When Safety Matters

Today's passenger ships are virtually floating cities with the onboard staff responsible for a large amount of people.

Thus all safety matters like routines, equipment and composition are vitally important in terms of staff competence and quality of the equipment.

All Consilium systems, regardless of segment, are meticulously designed, developed and manufactured and approved by all major statutory bodies.

We make Your Safety Safer

Smoke and thermal detectors are critical in protecting life and Consilium spares no effort or cost, in continually looking for ways to improve the performance of this of this equipment.

Since the introduction in 2008 our Evolution range of detectors; have performed beyond expectations. Particularly in terms of immunity from contamination which has drastically reduced the number of nuisance alarms and significantly increased the time-between-cleaning

We look beyond the next port of call

The life span of a passenger ship often exceeds 30 years so we to make every new system backward-compatible.

All of Consilium's new system are developed with this in mind and regarded as 'Future Safe'; i.e. we are aware that enhanced rules and new condition may well be on their way. Existing systems will be subject to re-build and modernization, a fact we have carefully considered and therefore introduced our 'hot-swap' feature.

In combination with modularity, the hot-swap feature allows alterations and modifications of the system without intervening on other parts of the system. This means that while work in being performed on an isolated region the rest of the system remains fully functional.
